Frankfort School Election Canceled

ANTIQUATED SCHOOL LAW PROHIBITS $45000 BOND ISSUE

On the eve of the special school election which was to have been held at Frankfort on Wednesday night for the purpose of voting on the proposed $45,000 bond issue for building a modern school building, it was discovered that an old school law of 1870 and now still in force prohibits the levying of more than 5 per cent of the total assessed valuation of a school district for such purposes, consequently it was found that the proposed bond issue of $45,000 would mean a levy of approximately 10 per cent on the total assessed valuation of District 157, which is $470,000.00. As a result of this discovery the election which was to have been held on Wednesday night has been called off.

According to the story told by F. J. Kohlhaugen, township school treasurer, a bond salesman from a Chicago brokerage concern called in town Monday with a view of buying the school bonds when they are offered for sale. He inquired what the total assessed valuation of District 157 is and upon investigation the school board learned it is $470,000 and then Mr. Kohlhaugen showed the board they could not float the proposed $45,000 bond issue as it would exceed the 5 per cent levy prescribed by the school law of 1870. The matter was taken up with County Superintendent of schools Aug. Maue at Joliet on Tuesday, but it was found that the law of 1870 had not been amended as to levy, although various amendments were made to this law in 1901, so the special election was canceled.

The school board finds that the 5 per cent levy will enable them to raise $23,500.00 and that an additional sum of $11,500 can be raised by direct taxation on the total property assessed valuation in the school district. This would mean that the maximum amount that can legally be raised under the old law is $35,000.00. This means that the proposed new school building will have to be built for this amount instead of $45,000 as had been planned, if it is built at all.

The school board will set a date for another special school election and will announce same soon as a decision is made.

District 157 consist of 8 square miles, its southern boundary extending to the Green Garden town line, and its northern boundary to the John Baumgartner farm.

Many of the Frankfort people feel that we have had a rather poor bunch of law makers and representatives at Springfield all these years who would change the law in parts and then let the moss old provisions of 1870 apply to this day and age. The law of 1870 on the 5 per cent levy mentioned was all right at the time it was enacted for then a building could be built cheaply and sufficient money could be raised by that kind of a levy, its usefulness is found wanting now for the amount that could be now raised by this levy would not be sufficient to build a modern school as the high cost of building is a mighty big item when compared with the building costs of 1870.

This matter presents a peculiar angle. In the first place the state condemned the old Frankfort public school and on the other hand its laws will not permit the district to raise enough money with which to build a school house that the state would call modern.

It is time that our representatives and law makers would begin to knock the moss off of some of our antiquated laws and make them practicable for this day and age.

Former Member Wis., Solons Gives Political Views

(Editor's note: The following article by Don C. Hall, former member of the Wisconsin Legislature, briefly but comprehensively outlines the Illinois Political situation.)

The political mind of Illinois should be more deeply concerned with the question involved in the National Campaign for the selection of a Presidential candidate, than with the undulations of the seething vortex of factionalism in the home state.

This people can be trusted to "come clean". They have invariably brought order out of chaos and always will.

Without disparaging criticism of any other aspirant of either or any party, the greatest and most prominent figure, selected, seasoned and labeled with the stamp of public approval is Ex-Governor Lowden, the logical candidate for the Presidency.

I was with him and for him as a candidate for Governor in 1916, was with and for him in 1920 as a prospective candidate for President and in 1924 after studying with increased interest, this man's capable conduct, both as public and private citizen—Hon. Frank O. Lowden is standing as a scar of hope in the political firmament well worthy of the consideration of the wise men of our present, political passion swept country.

"The Friends thou hast and their adoption tried, Grapple them to thy soul with hoops of steel."

Asked to comment upon the character, deeds, and purpose of one who holds the exalted position of Chief Executive of a great state, and who with soulful inspiration aspires to a continuance in official power, not alone that he may, having power so to do, put to flight the sordid pinioned calumnies that have assailed his stately domicile and person, but more largely prompted by the commendable desire to continue to its completion an unfinished Governmental task—without reluctance I answer the appeal, for the very nature of his acts, most censured, the nobility of his character, revealed in bold relief.

He who from his tower of political strength can, with pity and compassion, look out upon the frailties and weakness of men, sensing their need, knowing from his heart, that among the weakest, at least a single attribute of virtue is always found, and that virtue a sense of loyalty to mercy and forgiveness; is indeed worthy of the further confidence and trust of men. To him the cause of humanity is greater than position, and in the very qualities possessed by him, and yet condemned by his political opponents are contained the essence of all official greatness.

"Take each man's censure, but reserve thy judgment." In the adjoining State of Wisconsin, in the extending of Executive Clemency to the less favored unfortunate, official acts of Governor John Blaine are somewhat parallel to those of Governor Len Small and in the case of neither has it been shown, even by the most persistent, prejudiced, commentator that those to whom freedom has been restored thru exercise of the pardoning power have to any greater degree betrayed the confidence reposed in them than has the average citizen; nor has the return to their place among their fellows created a greater menace to society—state lines are but imaginary, the people of one commonwealth are as those of another, and a reasonable prediction would be that the same opposition which Blaine encountered and which, by reason of a dominant spirit of fairness, reacted in his re-election as Governor of Wisconsin, by an overwhelming majority in 1922, will be productive of the same result in the great State of Illinois in the re-election of Len Small in 1924.

Something to Think About

By F. A. WALKER

SERIOUS FACTS

WHEN we mortals turn from the beaten track and find that we are at a place where we must pause and meditate upon the serious facts confronting us, we are frequently inclined to become ill-humored and illogical.

A sort of mental strabismus darkens our vision and numbs our bodies, caused in a large measure by our disinclination to touch upon anything of a serious nature. We dislike to go afieid among the dark shadows where the ghosts of the past are lurking.

The open sunshine is always preferable for the reason that it dissipates doubt and permits us to see clearly without effort.

Indeed, the great majority of our relatives, and ourselves included, prefer the frivolous to the profound. We incline to touch lightly, to grasping with all our strength.

We fall at once into the state of the school boy when the trees are budding and the air is soft and warm. He tosses a dependable coin to decide whether he shall take his place in the classroom among serious teachers, and still more serious books.

He returns home at night with a string of fish, a new freckle or two, and goes early to bed, brooding over the seriousness of his plight. He will remember for life when he is told on the morrow that it is the serious men and women who do things. He will tell you that had Sir Isaac Newton not been the serious-minded man he was, the fall of an apple would not have revealed to him the law of gravitation.

What the thoughtless term "good luck," if you will look into the matter deeply, may be traced to serious thought. You may con your Greek verbs, or play hide and seek with your Latin, but if you are not really serious in your studies you can never master them.

To move forward day by day in your sphere of endeavor requires the quality of seriousness that made Washington so dearly beloved by his armies, and gave to Lincoln an enduring name.

To the serious-minded, earnest persons, the world is indebted for its greatest inventions and loftiest achievements.

We want a little more seriousness in our work, and decidedly less dejection, and when we get it, paradoxical though it may seem, we shall be more cheerful and infinitely happier.

THE MORE THE DISHES

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

MY MOTHER'S mother when she got

A dinner up was glad to do it;
She liked to entertain a lot,
And plenty came, for plenty knew it.
A Sunday meal, a Christmas Day,
Were right according to her wishes,
And yet she always used to say,
"The more the meal, the more the dishes."

She didn't say it to complain
But more to stop the rest complaining;
When they were tired enough to faint,
With still the kitchen things remaining,
"This ain't," she nearly always said,
"No miracle of loaves and fishes;
And, if you want to have a spread,
The more the meal, the more the dishes."

And I have noticed all along
Through life that wealth is like a dinner;
You've got to labor good and strong,
You've got to work to be a winner;
And, after you have got your gold,
Man seldom finds the ease he wishes;
You've got to work your wealth to hold—
The more the meal, the more the dishes.

People have probably pestered you and said you were not literary but "all business." Lackaday! they know little, those laughers! Ads today are really more literary than story-text. More time is taken in their making, more censorship in their publication, more brains (very often) in their building. Ads are nearly always faithfully illustrated where stories have illustrations that may not match their contents. Stick to your ad reading; you will learn about industry, art, prices, costs, inventions, and far more than most stories tell you.

THE ROMANCE OF WORDS

"ENGINE"

READERS of Chaucer who are none too familiar with the medieval meaning of the word "engine" have naturally been puzzled over the statement by the English writer that "Man hath sapience three: memorie, engin and intellect."

But it should be remembered that this word, formed from the Greek gignere, "to beget," and the Latin ingenium, was understood as late as the Eighteenth century to mean talent or wit—practically a synonym for "ingenuity" which is derived from the same word-root. So, for example, in Puttenham, we come across the line "Such made most of their works by translation, few of their own engine," while the additional meaning of "temper" is apparent from the quotation from Fairfax's Tasso, "His fell engine his grayer age did somewhat mitigate."

About the Sixteenth century the word began to take on the sense of the product of one's ingenuity, rather than the skill itself and was widely applied to any appliance or machine used in warfare, hunting, the commercial arts or torture. Thus a catapult, a cross-bow, a spinning wheel and a rack were all generically referred to as "engines" and it was not until the early part of the last century that the word was used in the currently accepted sense.

SECRETARY DENBY TO QUIT MARCH 10

Resignation of Secretary of Navy Accepted by the President.

Washington.—Following the resignation on Monday of Secretary of the Navy Edwin Denby, swept out of office by the tempest in Teapot Dome, the storm burst over the head of Attorney General Harry Daugherty.

The attorney general, after being confronted with assertions that examination of brokerage records had revealed that he had "played the market," asked for a conference with a number of Republican senators.

The attorney general is said to have admitted that he had bought and sold stocks all his life, but declared that he had never done so on a large scale, and had never played the market on government tips.

Secretary Denby's letter, dated February 17 (Sunday) follows:

"My Dear Mr. President: Heretofore I have verbally expressed to you my deep appreciation of your strong message in regard to the Robinson resolution.

"No one appreciates better than I how difficult your situation has become. I fear that my continuance in the cabinet would increase your embarrassments. Therefore I have the honor to tender to you my resignation as secretary of the navy."

"As there are a few pending matters which should receive my personal attention, I suggest that my resignation be accepted as of the date of March 10, 1924.

"It will always be a gratifying thought to me that neither you nor anyone else has at any time advised me to resign.

"EDWIN DENBY."

The senate, by a vote of 68 to 8, confirmed the nomination of Owen J. Roberts of Philadelphia to be special oil prosecutor.

13 Persons Perish in Tenement House Fire

New York.—Thirteen persons lost their lives early Tuesday morning in a fire in a five-story tenement house at 397 Madison street, on the lower East side.

The bodies of seven children, two women and four men were removed from the building, but have not been identified. A man and a five-year-old girl, both badly burned, were taken to Gouverneur hospital. The police believe that the fire was started by the same pyromaniac responsible for several tenement-house fires within a year.

Two baby carriages were found in the hallway of the Madison street house after the fire. Both were charred. The police believed that a man sneaked into the hallway and started the blaze in the carriages.

A man was caught running out of the house by a patrolman. The police held him for questioning.

THE PERIOD OF THE JUDGES

LESSON TEXT—Judg. 2:6-19; 7:1-23.
GOLDEN TEXT—I will love them freely.—
Hos. 14:4.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Story of a Brave Leader.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Gideon and His Three Hundred.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—
Israel Failing and Rising Again.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—
The Long Struggle With Idolatry.

I. A Synopsis of the Book of Judges.
This book covers the period from the conquest of Canaan and the death of Joshua to the judgeship of Samuel. The teacher should master the content of the book in order to teach this lesson, especially chapters 2-16.

1. The Sin of the People (Judg. 2:6-13). While Joshua and the elders of his generation lived, the people in some measure remained faithful to God, in obedience to His Word, but the very next generation went into apostasy. Their degradation may be accounted for as follows:

(1) Failure to drive out the Canaanites from their midst. They had gained the victory over them, but failed to exterminate them. Their mistaken tolerance became their undoing.
(2) Their amalgamation with the Canaanites. They intermarried with the heathen. Tolerance of the enemy is closely followed by union therewith and quick disaster comes in the wake of such union.

(3) Idolatry. Inter-marriage with the heathen was soon followed by the worship of the heathen's gods. God's people lose power over the world as soon as they make alliance with it.

2. God's Judgment for Their Sins (Judg. 2:14, 15). He delivered them into the hands of "the spoiler that spoiled them."
3. The Repentance of the People (Judg. 3:9). Under the yoke of their enemies they learned their folly and cried unto the Lord for deliverance.

4. God's Deliverance at the Hand of the Judges (Judg. 2:16-19). God heard their cries and by raising up military chieftains as Judges he saved them out of the hands of their enemies. A repetition of sin, oppression by the enemy, repentance on the part of the people and God's deliverance, constitute the story of the book of Judges.

II. The Victory of Gideon's Band (Judg. 7:1-23).

Gideon was the most outstanding of the Judges. He came from an obscure and unimportant family (6:15). Before going forward he wishes to be doubly sure (6:34-40). When once he was convinced of duty, he was courageous and enthusiastic. This is characteristic of all truly great men.

1. The Opposing Army (v. 1). Gideon and his army rose early on that eventful day and they came by the spring of Harod. Over against them was the host of the Midianites in battle array.

2. The Sifting of Gideon's Army (vv. 2-8). At Gideon's call 32,000 men responded, ready for the struggle. This seemed a small army to go against the Midianite army, 135,000 strong, but God said this was too many, lest they be led to boasting and self-confidence. The real danger was not in their small army but in their pride. All that were afraid were allowed to go back, leaving only 10,000. Still this was too many. When God was through sifting, only 300 remained.

3. God Gives Encouragement to Gideon. He bade Gideon go down to the Midianite camp, where he would hear something that would cheer his heart and strengthen his hand. When he came near he heard a man telling a dream, which was that of a barley cake tumbling into the camp and smiting it. He also heard the interpretation given to the dream which made Gideon to be that cake.

4. God Gives Victory to Gideon (vv. 16-23). His attack was unique. The whole matter was of faith (Heb. 11:32). Gideon with his 300 men formed into three companies, each man being provided with a trumpet and a lamp concealed within a pitcher. Thus armed they surrounded the camp of the Midianites. They were all instructed to keep their eyes upon their leader and imitate him. At the proper moment they blew their trumpets and broke their pitchers, giving opportunity for the lamps to shine out. This awful crash of broken pitchers, following the shout, "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon," threw the Midianites into a panic, causing them to fight among themselves. One hundred and twenty thousand were thus slain, leaving but 15,000 of that mighty army (Judg. 8:10).

What Turkish Women Say About Marriage

Few travelers have had the opportunities to learn the circumstances and the views of life characteristic of the secluded women of the Turkish harems that Miss Grace Ellison, the English writer, has enjoyed. She declares that she has never seen an "old maid" in Turkey and does not believe that such a thing exists. Then she goes on:

I have talked with many Turkish brides and have received many confidences; the whole question of marriage in Turkey has always interested me immensely. The first Turkish bride I ever met, long years ago, had never seen her husband before marriage and had detested him from the first. "There was nothing the matter with him," she admitted, "except that I didn't like him." Ultimately she managed to escape, married a man of her own choice and was much more unhappy with him than she had been with the first.

Another bride told me that as a great favor she was allowed to see her future husband, and that she has regretted it ever since! "The dreadful imprudence seems to have robbed life of all its romance!" she said.

Yet one more confession! "I peeped through the lattice window to look at him as he walked past," said another. "Quite an uninteresting little man, but he was my fate, and I might have got something worse."

But at her wedding I found a tall and handsome bridegroom. "What does this mean?" I asked. "What has happened?"

And she answered quite calmly: "I must have looked at the wrong man."—Youth's Companion.

Export Figures Show Origin of Shipments

To serve shippers in the interior, particularly in the Middle Western states, the Department of Commerce is compiling statistics of exports by states of original shipments. The department's statistical reports have previously shown only the exterior ports from which export freight cleared for foreign countries.

Under the new arrangement, all goods shipped on through bills of lading, for which the declarations are prepared by the shipper in the interior, will be credited to the interior state of shipment. Goods consigned from interior places to seaboard ports, to be there consolidated or reconsigning for export, will also be credited to the state of original shipment if an export declaration prepared by the interior shipper, showing the place of original shipment, is filed at the custom house.

Merchandise forwarded from the interior to the seaboard for export by commission merchants, forwarding, or other export agents, and the export declaration prepared by them will in most cases be shown as exported from the port of final shipment, and will so appear in the statistical reports.

Real Inducement

Widows find it very hard to remarry nowadays. German widows find it especially hard. In a German newspaper last summer there was an advertisement that read like this:

"Matrimonial—A war widow, Berlin born, under thirty-five, blond, healthy, attractive, who possesses the entire wardrobe of her late husband (height five feet eight inches, weight 167 pounds) consisting of three good business suits, two overcoats and five complete uniforms which would dye well, together with hats, shoes, linens, etc., to correspond, desires to meet gentleman under sixty with view to matrimony. Address Love and Faith."—Los Angeles Times.

Too Old to Be Good

Roy Chapman Andrews, of the Asiatic expedition in China overtook the expedition's account with the American Banking company at Peking. When the bank asked for more security Andrews offered two dinosaur eggs 10,000,000 years old. The banker refused to consider the eggs as collateral and it was necessary to sell the American-made automobiles which brought half the original cost despite the fact that they had traveled 6,000 miles over camel trails of northern China.

Not Worth the Effort

Bill wanted to slip out of barracks—unofficially—to see his girl, and he went to the sentry and stated the case. "I'll stay in barracks," said Bill.—Pathfinder.

THE SHADOWS' DANCE

"Let's give a dance this evening," said the Shadows. "And let all the Shadows come."

So the Shadows all came to the dance. From everywhere they came and so many were they that they spread themselves all out over the streets—everywhere the Shadows seemed to be.

This dance was being given in a city.

When the leading Shadows had first suggested this party one timid little Shadow had said:

"But won't the people hurt me?" "No, no no," the other Shadows said. "Shadows can't be hurt."

So the little Shadow went along too.

And the dance began.

It was a wonderful dance and the lights twinkled from the city streets and the Shadows danced here and there.

They flitted this way and that, they were here for a moment and then off again.

Oh, there was nothing they did not do!

The lights seemed to glow and dance with joy. Everywhere there were the Shadows dancing, merrily playing with one another on the gay and exciting city streets.

How exciting life could be, the little Shadow thought to itself as it lost its fear, in a city.

And life could be exciting in the country, too.

The little Shadow knew that. And there was fun to be had in rooms in houses, oh, such games as there were to be played.

And as the lights twinkled and the Shadows danced and played they sang this song:

Gay little Shadows are we,
Merry and bright as can be.
We're filled with a zest,
We won't stop to rest.
For gay little Shadows are we.

Gay little Shadows are we,
This you surely can see.
We like darkness and light
When the mixture's just right.
For gay little Shadows are we.

Gay little Shadows are we,
We hop and we skip, one, two, three.
We run here and there,
We're 'most everywhere,
For gay little Shadows are we.

Gay little Shadows are we,
This you surely can see.
We like darkness and light
When the mixture's just right.
For gay little Shadows are we.

Gay little Shadows are we,
Merry and bright as can be.
We're filled with a zest,
We won't stop to rest.
For gay little Shadows are we!

And the Shadows danced and danced until you would have thought they could have danced no more, and many people spoke of the way the Shadows were dancing that night, but they didn't hear the song of the Shadows.

The Fairy Queen heard it, though, and she asked the Breeze Brothers to send out the words of the song so that it could be heard by many, many friends of the dear, cheery, naughty, playful, merry little Shadows.

EVERY BUSINESS MAN'S GREATEST OBLIGATION

By WALTER W. HEAD
President American Bankers Association

We speak reverentially of "Our Country." What do we mean? Are we thinking of the service which we owe to our country, of the love which we bear for it, or are we thinking only of the protection which our country can afford us, only of the benefit which we may derive from it?

Are we thinking of what we may do for our country, or of what our country may do for us? Our duty to ourselves and our country requires positive as well as negative action. We must be constructive. As citizens of our country, do we fulfill the obligations incumbent upon us? Do we exercise our right to vote—and when we do, do we always place intelligence, efficiency and patriotism in government ahead of every other consideration?

The message which I wish to emphasize is a simple truth, one easily understood, but one of great importance, perhaps more important today than ever before: We—I, as an individual—must be responsible for our government—my government.

We cannot delegate our responsibility in government to someone else. There is no substitute for individual interest in government and individual responsibility for government.

I have said to bankers that the greatest duty of the banker today is not to loan money, but to loan himself—to the service of his community.

MANY A WAY TO OBTAIN CREDIT

The farmer, who is the initial producer of goods, has more agencies designed to assist in his financing than has any other group, partly as a result of the natural growth of our present financial structure and partly because of the special agencies created by the government during recent years. The list of his credit sources is a surprisingly large one, for he may borrow directly from the savings banks, trust companies, and insurance companies; may use the Federal Farm Loan Banks and the Joint Stock Land Banks; may sell his mortgages through local farm loan mortgage brokers, the larger mortgage companies, and certain investment banking houses; if a cattle raiser, he can discount his paper with cattle loan companies; his marketing is often done through a state or national co-operative marketing association; he has access to the regular commercial banks for short time funds; and of course, participates as any other consumer in the usual retail store credit. Moreover, the Federal Reserve Act has provided broad accommodation for agriculture in its text as originally adopted and in the several amendments since made, and the Agricultural Credits Act authorizes the establishment of the Federal Intermediate Credit Bank as a further aid. When one hears the statement made that in our economic system the farmer alone is not provided for, the answer is merely, "It isn't so." Many people are coming to believe, and this includes some of the agricultural bloc in Congress, that the farmer's trouble is not due to his lack of credit but to having had credits granted too easily and in too large amounts.—Journal of the American Bankers Association.

Customer Cooperation

TELEPHONE service consists essentially in providing the facilities for communication.

Reduced to fundamentals, it may be stated thus:—

- A is provided with a telephone.
- B is provided with a telephone.
- C, through wires and mechanism, connects these two telephones.

Satisfaction with the service depends largely on A and B.

From the very beginning their cooperation is imperative. A must call B and B must answer. Doing these things in the way which makes for good service involves:—

- 1—Such care in asking for the number as one would use in addressing a letter.
- 2—Such promptness in answering the call as one would give to keeping a personal appointment.
- 3—Such courtesy as one would show in making or receiving a business or social call.
- 4—Such clear, correct speech as one would use in the face-to-face transaction of the most important business.

Each subscriber can increase the effectiveness of his telephone communication by such thoughtfulness as he would employ in his daily life.

Jim turned over and over in his mind these new applications of old, historic, significant words, dear to every reader of history—"glebe-land," "schoolmanse"—and it seemed to him that they signified the return of many old things lost in Merrie England, lost in New England, lost all over the English-speaking world, when the old publicly-paid clergyman ceased to be so far the servant of all the people that they refused to be taxed for his support. Was not the new kind of rural teacher to be a publicly-paid leader of thought, of culture, of progress, and was he not to have his manse, his glebe-land, and his "living"? And all because, like the old clergyman, he was doing a work in which everybody was interested and for which they were willing to be taxed. Perhaps it was not so high a status as the old; but who was to say that? Certainly not Jim Irwin, the possessor of the new kind of "living," with its "glebe-land" and its "schoolmanse." He would have rated the new as at least quite as high as the old.

From the brow of the promontory, a light concrete bridge took the pretty little gorge in the leap of a single arch, and landed the eye at the bottom of the front yard of the schoolhouse. Thus the new institution of life was in full view of the schoolmanse veranda, and yet shut off from it by the dry moat of the brook and its tiny meadow of blue-grass.

Across the road was the creamery, with its businesslike unloading platform, and its addition in process of construction for the reception of the machinery for the co-operative laundry. Not far from the creamery, and also across the road, stood the blacksmith and wheelwright shop. Still farther down the street were the barn, poultry house, pens, hutchies and yards of the little farm—small, as were all the buildings save the schoolhouse itself, which was builded, as it should have been, for the future.

And even the schoolhouse, when one thinks of the uses to which it was to be put—kitchen, nursery, kindergarten, banquet hall, theater, moving picture hall, classrooms, manual training rooms, laboratory and counting room and what not, was wonderfully small—Colonel Woodruff said far too small—though it was necessarily so large as to be rather astonishing to the unexpectant passer-by.

The unexpectant passer-by this May day, however, would have been especially struck by the number of motor cars, buggies and surreys parked in the yard back of the creamery, along the roadside, and by the driveway running to the schoolhouse. People in numbers had arrived by five o'clock in the afternoon, and were still coming. They strolled about the place, examining the buildings and grounds, and talking with the blacksmith and the butter-maker.

Gradually they drew into the schoolhouse like a swarm of bees into a hive selected by the queen. None of them, however, went across the concrete bridge to the schoolmanse, save Mrs. Simms, who crossed, consulted with Mrs. Irwin about the shrubbery and flowers, and went back to Buddie and Jinnie, who were good children but natchally couldn't be trusted with so many other young ones without some watchin'.

"They're coming! They're coming!" This was the cry borne to the people in and about the schoolhouse by that Hans Hansen who would be called Hans Nilsen. Hans had been to the top of the little hill and had a look toward town.

Like a crew manning a rigging, or a crowd having its picture taken, the assemblage crystallized into forms determined by the chances of getting a glimpse of the bungalow across the ravine—on posts, fences, trees and hillocks.

A motor car came over the hillock, ran down the road to the driveway to the schoolmanse and drew up at the door. Out of it stepped Mrs. Woodruff and the colonel, their daughter, the county superintendent of schools, and Mr. Jim Irwin. Jennie was dressed in a very well-tailored traveling costume, and Jim in a moderately well-tailored business suit. The fact that when they reached the threshold Jim picked Jennie up in his arms and carried her in, will enable any good detective to put one and one together and make a pair—which comes pretty near telling the whole story.

By this time it was nearly seven, and Calista Simms came across the charmed bridge as a dispatch-bearer, saying that if Mr. Jim and Miss Jennie didn't mind, dinner would be served right soon. It was cooked about right, and the folks was gettin' right hungry—an' such a crowd! There were fifteen in the babies' room, and for a while they thought the youngest Hamm young one had swallowed a marble. She would tell 'em they would be right over; good-by.

There was another cheer as the three elderly and the two younger people emerged from the schoolmanse and took their way over the bridge to the school side of the velvet-bottomed moat, but it was shut off like the vibration of a bell dipped in water by the sudden rush of the shouters into the big assembly room, now filled with tables for the banquet. And here the domestic economy classes, with their mothers, sisters, female cousins and aunts, met them, as waiters, hat snatchers, hostesses, floor managers and cooks, scoring the greatest triumph of history in the Woodruff district. For everything went off like clockwork, especially the victuals—and such victuals!

There was quantity in meats, breads, vegetables—and there was also savor. There was plenty, and there was style. Ask Mrs. Haakon Peterson, who yearned for culture, and had been afraid her children wouldn't get it if Yim Irwin taught them nothing but farming. She will tell you that the dinner—which so many thought of all the time as supper—was just as well served as if it had been in the Chamberlain Hotel in Des Moines, where she had stayed when she went with Haakon to the state convention.

Why shouldn't it have been even better served? It was planned, cooked, served and eaten by people of intelligence and brains, in their own house, as a community affair, and in a community where, if any one should ask you, you are authorized to state that there's as much wealth to the acre as in any strictly farming spot between the two oceans, and where you are perfectly safe—financially—in dropping from a balloon in the dark of the moon, and paying a hundred and fifty dollars an acre for any farm you happen to land on. Why shouldn't things have been well done, when every one worked, not for money, but for the love of the doing, and the love of learning to do in the best way?

Some of these things came out in the speeches following the repast—and some other things, too. It was probably not quite fair for B. B. Hamm to incorporate in his wishes for the welfare and prosperity and so forth of Jim and Jennie that stale one about the troubles of life, but he wanted to see Jennie blush—which as a matter of fact he did; but she failed to grow quite so fiery red as did Jim. But B. B. was a good fellow, and a Trojan in his work for the cause, and the schoolmaster and superintendent of schools forgave him. A remark may be a little broad, and still clean, and B. B. made a clean speech, mainly devoted to the increased value of that farm he at one memorable time was going to sell before Jim's fool notions could be carried out.

Colonel Woodruff made most of the above points which I have flitted from him. He had begun as a reformer late in life, he said, but he would leave it to them if he hadn't worked at the trade steadily after enlistment. He had become a follower of Jim Irwin, because Jim's reform was like dragging the road in front of your own farm—it was reform right at home, and not at the county seat, or Des Moines, or Washington. He had followed Jim Irwin as he had followed Lincoln, and Grant, and Blaine, and McKinley—because Jim Irwin stood for more upward growth for the average American citizen than the colonel could see any prospect of getting from any other choice. And he was proud to live in a country like this, saved and promoted by the great men he had followed, and in a neighborhood served and promoted, if not quite saved, by Jim Irwin. And he was not so sure about it not being saved. Every man and nation had to be saved anew every so often, and the colonel believed that Jim Irwin's new kind of rural school is just as necessary to the salvation of this country. "I am about to close my speech," said the colonel, "and the small service I have been able to give to this nation. I went through the war, neighbors—and am proud of it; but I've done more good in the peaceful service of the last three years than I did in four of fighting and campaigning. That's the way I feel about what we've done in Consolidated District Number One." (Vigorous and long-continued applause.)

"Oh, Colonel!" The voice of Angie Talcott rose from away back near the kitchen. "Can Jennie keep on bein' county superintendent, now she's married?"

A great guffaw of laughter reduced poor Angie to tears; and Jennie had to go over and comfort her. It was all right for her to ask that and they ought not to laugh at Angie, so there! Now, you're all right, and let's talk about the new schoolhouse, and so forth. Jennie brought the smiles back to Angie's face, just in time to hear Jim tell the people amid louder cheers that he had been asked to go into the rural school extension work in two states, and had been offered a fine salary in either place, but that he wasn't even considering these offers. And about that time, the children began to get sleepy and cross and naughty, and the women set in motion agencies which moved the crowd homeward.

Before a bright wood fire—which they really didn't need, but how else was Jim's mother to show off the little fireplace?—sat Jim and Jennie. They had been together for a week now—this being their homecoming—and had only begun to get really happy. Jim sat looking into the fire, oblivious of it. When Jennie spoke, her voice seemed to emanate from Jim's shirt front.

"Did you hear," said she, "what Angie Talcott asked?"

"M'h'm," said Jim.

"Well," said Jennie, "now that I'm married can I go on being county superintendent?"

There was a long silence.

"Would you like to?" asked Jim.

"Kind of," said Jennie; "if I knew enough about things to do anything worth while; but I'm afraid that by rising to my full height I shall always just fall to be able to see over anything."

"You've done more for the schools of the county," said Jim, "in the last year than any other county superintendent has ever done."

"And we shall need the money so like—so like the dickens," was Jennie's rejoinder.

"Oh, not so badly," laughed Jim, "except for the first year. I'll have this little farm paying as much as some quarter sections when we get squared about. Why, we can make a living on this school farm, Jennie—or I'm not fit to be the head of the school."

There was another silence, during which Jennie took down her hair, and wound it around Jim's neck.

"It will settle itself one of these days anyhow," said he at last. "There's enough to do for both of us right here."

"But they won't pay me," she protested.

"They don't pay the ministers' wives," said Jim, "and yet, the ministers with the right sort of wives are always the best paid. I guess you'll be in the bill, Jennie."

Jim walked to the open window and looked out over the still landscape. Down in the little meadow grew the dreaming trees, their round crowns rising as from a sea not quite to the level of the bungalow, their thrifty leaves glistening in the moonlight. Across the pretty bridge lay the silent little campus with its Twentieth century temple facing its chief priest. It was all good, without and within.

He went across the hall to bid his mother good night. She clung to him convulsively, and they had their own five minutes which arranged matters for these two silent natures on the new basis forever. Jennie was in white before the mantel when he returned, smiling at the inscription thereon:

"Let Us Cease Thinking So Much of Agricultural Education, and Devote Ourselves to Educational Agriculture. So Will the Nation Be Made Strong."

"Why didn't you put it in Latin?" she inquired. "It would have had so much more distinction."

"I wanted it to have meaning instead," said Jim. "And besides, nobody who was at hand was quite sure how to turn the Latin phrase. Are you?"

Jennie leaned forward with her elbows on her knees, and studied it.

"I believe I could," said she, "with out any pony. But after all, I like it better as it is. I like everything, Jim—everything!"

[THE END.]

Facts About St. Paul's.

It is no mean walk round St. Paul's cathedral; twice round the railings is a mile. The entrance length is not quite 170 yards; it is 63 yards wide at its extreme point, and the towers are 74 yards high. Fifty workmen are constantly employed in the cathedral, and the monuments keep six men always busy. The floor is swept three times a week and washed once a month, and the whole building is cleaned once a year. It used to take an hour to light the gas, and there are eight fire stoves always burning, consuming a ton of coal a day. There are 3,000 chairs in the cathedral, and 200 surplices in the wardrobe, 60 of which are used every Sunday. The half-mile of iron rails in the churchyard, with the seven ornamental gates, weigh 200 tons and cost £11,000. Twenty-six thousand people can stand under the roof.

Rich Sinner and Righteous Savior

By REV. GEORGE E. GUILLE
Extension Department, Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.

TEXT—And when he was gone forth into the way, there came one running, and kneeled to him, and asked him, Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?—Mark 10:17.

Here is another of those stories, with which the gospels abound, of a sinner in the presence of the Savior. But how different the result in this case! In the others we read of salvation and peace for the sinner and of rejoicing on the part of the Savior. But not here. "He was sad and went away grieved."

Sad, too, that infinite Heart from whom he turns away, and sad still over the thousands that reject Him today. And why does this interview end so differently from the others?

It was not that the Savior's grace and power were not all-sufficient for him, as for all other sinners, nor that the yearning of His mighty heart was diminished. It is expressly declared that Jesus loved him. It was not because the young man was rich nor because he was a ruler, for many of these classes were saved. And in appearance, at least, he was eager, for he "came running," and there was the attitude of humility, for he "kneeled at Jesus' feet." But alas! he came as so many come today, with no deep conviction of sin but full of self-confidence.

"Teacher," he said, "what good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life?" He has no doubt that some good thing is needed, in the doing of which he can earn eternal life. And as so many are on that road, he thinks it must surely be the right one. It is not to confess himself a sinner, helpless and undone, that he comes, but to ask what he can do. Yes, men are thronging that hopeless road, forgetting that it is sinners for whom Christ has died, that it is their sin that gives them a claim upon Him, and that eternal life is His gracious gift, not a thing to be earned or paid for.

Not only does he ask what he can do, but boasts in what he has done. "All these have I observed from my youth," he replies to the Lord's recital of the commandments. Honest in this he was, no doubt, and, with Saul of Tarsus, he was "touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless." And this he estimates as establishing a claim upon God.

And we must not overlook one significant clause in the text. He came running and "kneeled to Jesus in the way." What way? It was the way to the cross, as verses 32 and 33 of the chapter declare. He blocks the Lord's way to the cross, saying, in effect: "You need not die for me, show me what to do. I am quite sufficient in myself. I have no need for a Savior, I can save myself and make myself worthy of eternal life by the good things I do."

At first glance the Savior's answer seems to be a closing of the door in the face of an honest seeker. "Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is God." God alone can bestow eternal life. It is not gained by good deeds, but is given freely to those who accept Him in whom it is. "If I am not God why ask me about eternal life?"

The Lord must meet him therefore where he is; not with the gospel of His grace, for he knows no need of grace. The law must do its work, for "by the law is the knowledge of sin." And thus the Lord uses it, to give His questioner what he did not possess, the knowledge of himself as a sinner. "Thou knowest the commandments," He said, and quoting several of them, ended with "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." But if it is a matter of doing, all must be done. And when the ruler declared that he had kept all these, he was astounded at the answer: "One thing thou lackest: go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, take up the cross, and follow me." The cross! It was the one thing he would avoid.

How could the God of all grace make that a condition of eternal life? It was what the law promised to those who kept it: "the man that doeth these things shall live by them." But who ever did them or could? If he loved his neighbor as himself as, in Matthew's account, he declared he did, why not give all that he had to the poor? Would it be any more than giving it back to himself? Thus the Lord is, with the law, searching out the heart that does not know itself. He is not making law-keeping a condition of eternal life, but showing the young man how far short he comes of the law's requirements in order to shut him up to Himself as the only Savior. And He does it with the tender assurance that His heart is open to him and ready to receive him, for "Jesus, beholding him, loved him."

And though he went away grieved, we may hope that that love brought him back at length, not to seek some good thing to do but to accept what the cross had done for him.

Ancients Believed Man's Glory Was His Beard

There was a deep-rooted belief among the ancient peoples of the East that a man's glory was his beard. Compulsory shaving and the close-cropping of hair were signs of degradation. This is borne out by Assyrian sculptures, which always show kings with beards and long hair and slaves with close-cropped hair and clean-shaven faces.

The Egyptians, however, had different ideas. They considered that hair was a source of dirt and shaved both face and head. Their slaves and servants were compelled to do the same.

The early Greeks and Romans shaved off their beards because they gave the enemy a good hold in hand-to-hand fighting! It is recorded that Alexander the Great ordered his soldiers to shave for this reason.

It was the custom among Romans to shave off the beard at the age of twenty-one and present it as an offering to the household gods. A beard was grown after that age only as a sign of mourning.—London Tit-Bits.

African Ruler Devises Language of His Own

A few years ago Njoya, king of Foutabon, in the Cameroons, became jealous of the particularly good set of secret languages of neighboring tribes, and invented from French, English and German words a code tongue of his own which is reserved for the exclusive use of the "cabinet" and upper administrative officials.

The interesting feature of this state language, which was discovered and studied by a Frenchman, Lieutenant Clapot, is that, instead of meaning their usual equivalent, the European words have entirely different code significations. "La mission," for instance, means "to see," and "franc" means "the king." "Ordnung" means "we," "savant" means "an egg," "lemon" means "a hill," "left" means "which," and "English" means "a head."—Manchester Guardian.

School Laws in Switzerland

In Switzerland if a child does not attend school on a particular day the parent gets notice from the public authority that he is fined so many francs; the second day the fine is increased, and by the third day the amount becomes a serious one. In case of sickness the pupil is excused, but if there is any suspicion of shaming a doctor is sent to the house.

In a crisis, philosophy can become desperation.

WASHINGTON SIDELIGHTS

Washington and Its “Alley-Houses”

WASHINGTON.—At a conference on the alley situation in this city before the subcommittee of the District committee of which Senator Copeland is chairman, the New York senator said that living conditions in the slums of the national capital are worse than in the slums of New York. This statement, he added, was based upon his personal inspection of Washington's alleys. The general discussion of the entire subject resulted in the adoption of a program of which the salient features are:

Publication of the names of owners of alley properties that are in insanitary condition; district commissioners, acting under existing law to notify owners to clean up or tear down property that has gone beyond possible repair; residents of alley houses and owners of vacant lots used as dumping places for rubbish to be notified to place all refuse material by a specific date where it may be removed; district commissioners to work out a plan for the removal of this refuse; senate committee to use its influence for an appropriation that will enable a thorough cleaning up of the capital; wooden fences dividing dooryards and along alleys, constituting a fire menace, to be removed and wire substituted where necessary.

Senator Copeland, who, as health officer of New York city has had considerable experience in municipal housecleaning, made it plain he was not advocating the ejection of occupants of alley houses. “I do not believe in paternalism or in the government going out and building houses,” he said; “but we can have regulations and enforce them regarding decent living conditions.”

Engineer Commissioner Bell said the owners got a return of from 15 to 30 per cent on their ramshackle houses. He reported that 271 buildings, valued at $58,000, had been condemned, and that better work in that direction could be done if there were an adequate number of inspectors.

In the course of the discussion of one phase of the situation when the commissioners pleaded lack of authority, Senator Copeland replied grimly:

“Sometimes it is a good thing to go ahead and do these things and get the authority afterward.”

Observing that the federal authorities had gone into the Canal Zone, into Porto Rico and other territories and “cleaned them up,” Senator Bell, chairman of the District committee, said he could see no reason why the federal authorities should not clean up the national capital. He thought congress had neglected its duty in this respect.

Mrs. Magnus Johnson at Home in Capital

LIVING in a doll's house, cooking with gas, paying milk bills, eating baker's bread and getting letters from the farm—these head the list of thrills which Mrs. Harriet Dorman Johnson, wife of Senator Magnus Johnson of Minnesota, has experienced since taking up her residence in Washington.

The magnificence of the capitol, the beauty of the White House, the splendor of the Lincoln memorial—none of these has delighted Mrs. Johnson as much as the simple joys which come to her day to day in her little bungalow out Takoma park way.

In fact, since arriving in Washington about the middle of November, and with the exception of the week spent at the Hotel Portland in the city, Mrs. Johnson has spent most of her time “getting settled” in her $75 a month doll's house and hasn't bothered about seeing many of the sights.

Harriet Dorman Johnson, native Minnesotan, who had never been more than 100 miles from her birthplace in her life, arrived in Washington in as calm and knowing a mood as if she had been a native daughter of the District.

“I saw no need of getting excited about it,” says Mrs. Johnson. “I had seen so many pictures and ‘movies’ of Washington and read so much about it that I felt like it was a sort of old friend. Of course, it is a beautifully laid out city and filled with interesting historic spots and buildings. Sometime I shall go on a sightseeing expedition, but not until I finish fixing up our home. The senator and my two girls come first.”

Her sons, Victor, twenty-one years old; Francis, twenty, and Magnus, Jr., aged fourteen, together with the eldest of the family, Lillian, now twenty-four, are running the farm while their mother is in Washington making a home for the senator and their two younger daughters, Agnes and Florence.

Contrary to general belief, Mrs. Johnson is not Swedish. She was Harriet Dorman, and was born and reared on the next farm to the one on which she went to live when she married Magnus Johnson. Two or three trips up state in Minnesota to visit relatives were her sole journeyings away from home until she set out for Washington.

Mrs. Johnson's father, Samuel Dorman, a widower of eighty-two years, keeps bachelor quarters on a little farm not a mile from where the Magnus Johnsons live. The late Mrs. Dorman, mother of Mrs. Johnson, was a native of Kentucky. Mr. Dorman was born in Maine.

Parking Space at Premium in Capital

WASHINGTON now has 105,680 vehicles, as against 85,425 last year, an increase of 23.7 per cent. The question of parking space “downtown” is rapidly becoming a far more burning issue in the capital than home rule for the District, taxation, soldiers' bonus, or the amount spent by Edward Bok in promoting his peace plan project.

Eleven thousand cars are parked every morning in the congested area, according to a survey made recently by Colonel Sherrill, chief military aid to President Coolidge and superintendent of public buildings and grounds.

In addition to his duties at the White House and the War department Colonel Sherrill seeks to find parking space within walking distance of their offices for the thousands of automobile owners. The majority of these are officers and employees of the government, who come to work every morning in their cars ranging from limousines to flivvers and from homes within the city limits to farms and bungalows in Maryland and Virginia.

In Washington the horse and carriage has pretty well passed into history. From President Coolidge all the way around the official circle automobiles have replaced the carriage and pair of former days. Every cabinet officer and all other high ranking officers of the administration use cars today, their own or those provided for them by the government.

In the diplomatic corps the last carriage and pair to survive was the smart little turnout of the French ambassador, recognized all over Washington by the cockades on the bridles of the horses and in the hats of the coachman and footman on the box. But even this is seen no more.

According to statistics compiled by the B. F. Goodrich Rubber company, 1923 was a record breaking year in the automotive industry. Every state in the Union registered an increase in the number of cars in use. The total registration for the United States amounted to 15,221,183 cars and trucks, which is nearly 90 per cent of the total world registration of motor vehicles.

Today there is a car for every seven people in the country. Ten years ago there was one car for every seventy inhabitants.

Farm Families Larger Than in Cities

AN INTERESTING fact has been dragged out from its hiding place in a maze of census report figures and presented to the American people for consideration. This fact is that the farms, which are responsible for most of the nation's food supply, have the added burden of being a main source of the child supply.

In other words, while the city family tends to dwindle to proportions that fit a city flat, the farm family continues to fill an entire farmhouse. This contrast has been noted for some years, but statistics on farm population were not tabulated until the last census, and the country has not realized how great a proportion of non-producers the farms were supporting. To put it into plain figures, if you compare the 30,000,000 of our farm population with an equal amount of city population, you find that the farms have 2,000,000 more children under ten years than those cities have.

This statement is made by Dr. C. J. Galpin, who is in charge of farm population studies in the Department of Agriculture. To make his figures more vivid, he shows that 2,000,000 is, roughly, about the population of Oklahoma. If you imagine the task of feeding, clothing and educating a group of people of this size, you have an idea of the situation. Then think of the farmers supporting their excess burden of young children and trying to keep up with the rising standard of living.

Children between ten and twenty years are more numerous on the farms than in the cities in almost the same proportion as those under ten. So, altogether, the farms have an excess burden of nearly 4,000,000 children, as compared with the same amount of city population.

It is true that the farmer can feed a large family almost as cheaply as a city man can feed a small one. Some other expenses are lower, too, in rural districts. And the child on the farm helps in the work. In its surveys, the United States children's bureau finds that farm work is an important form of child labor.

Why You May Need—for Economical Transportation

There are three main groups of prospective buyers of Chevrolet automobiles and commercial cars.

First, are all who know from comparisons or through the experiences of friends that Chevrolet provides the utmost dollar value in modern, economical transportation of people or merchandise.

Second, the large group of people with modest incomes who have the false impression that so good a car as Chevrolet is beyond their means.

They do not realize that due to engineering excellence and full modern equipment, Chevrolet operating and maintenance costs average so low that during the life of the car, it delivers modern, comfortable, fast transportation at the lowest cost per mile, including the purchase price.

Third, the smaller but very important group of car owners of ample means, only a small percentage of whom as yet realize that Chevrolet as an extra car virtually costs them nothing, due to the reduction in their transportation expenses effected by it.

We respectfully suggest consideration, investigation and comparison of Chevrolet with any other car at any price.

Did You Ever Think that you might have been living as a British subject but for Poor Richard? And you would be reckoning values in pounds, shillings and pence.

Then Irving Bacheller's great book —

In the Days of Poor Richard would have cost you about "nine and six" instead of $2.00. Try that on your computing machine.

But then there would have been no such story as "In the Days of Poor Richard." We'd all have been out of luck!
